Squads prove pep definitely isn't dead

High schools' teams prove spirit still alive

By Paula Monarez

Is school spirit dead? "Noooo way," screamed Etiwanda's pep squads in unison.

"Are you kidding?" asked Lisa Croy, one of the Upland High School's varsity cheerleaders, in disbelief. "School spirit here is alive and kicking."

While students may not be as true to their school as they were in the early '60s, today's high school pep squads try to show just as much spirit as their earlier counterparts.

Whether it's dressing up in 1950s gigs for a spirit competition or eating through a whip cream pie in search of a lifesaver candy roll, cheerleaders and song leaders will do almost anything for their schools.

Take the recent weekend's "Back to Cool" spirit contest at the Montclair Plaza.

While waiting for the event to begin, song leader squads from the eight local high schools began cheering.

"Chiiiiinnno," screamed the girls from Chino High School.

On the opposite side, Pomona High School boosters began their cheer, "Give me a P."

Prize money and West Valley bragging rights were at stake.

The rah, rah really began to heat up during the spirit competition as each squad tried to out-dance, out-leap and out-scream one another to music from the 1950s, '60s and '80s.

Apparently Upland High, which grooved to "Lollipop, Lollipop" and "Great Balls of Fire," had more spirit than the rest because its boosters came out on top, followed by Pomona High School and Chaffey High School.

While such competitions are great for reviving school loyalty, nowhere is school spirit more evident than at pep rallies.

Dressed in poodle skirts and white blouses reminiscent of the '50s, Chino High School's song leaders do a routine to old rock 'n' roll tunes.

Chaffey High School may not have a winning tradition out on the football field, but when it comes time to cheer at pep rallies, the crowd is there.

"Those kids really get involved," said Jenny Hanley, the school's pep adviser. "They want to win the spirit bell and are just very proud of their school."

At Etiwanda, school officials have made their rallies voluntary.

"Otherwise we would have to turn kids away," said Debbie Schurr, the school's pep adviser. "The place gets really packed."

Often the enthusiasm of the students is a reflection of the pep squads.

"We are responsible for getting the crowds going and for backing up the teams whether they win or lose," said Nina Caldera, a song leader with Upland High School.

To get the crowds more involved, many schools have created pep commissioners, who organize rallies, keep tabs on the pep squads and get the crowds rooting.

"I do a little bit of everything," said Travis Dreedd, Upland's pep commissioner. "It's a great position to be in."

That is something many students believe, according to Hanley.

As an example last spring more than 100 people competed for 25 positions on the Chaffey High School pep squads, Hanley said.

However, being on a pep squad is not all uniforms and pompons. It takes a lot of work and dedication.

Members spend hours practicing their routines and supporting the various athletic teams.

"Sometimes our grades suffer," said Denise Hawkins,

Chaffey's pep commissioner. "So we have to work extra hard."

Although there are school rivalries, (Etiwanda students see red at the mention of Alta Loma High School, while Upland players get enthusiastic when it's time to compete against Damien High School), that competitive spirit is left mostly on the field, most of the cheerleaders said.

HITTING THE BOOKS — Michael Johnson, 6, of Upland, read 196 books this summer as part of the Wild About Reading program at the Upland Public Library. The Valencia School student is the recipient of a medal for his accomplishments. About 1,000 children participated in the program.

Campaign begun to raise money for neonatal unit

A $3.5 million campaign to raise money for a neonatal intensive care unit and a cardiac catheterization laboratory has been started by San Antonio Community Hospital.

Some $1.5 million already has been raised from the hospital's groups, including $700,000 from the medical staff; $170,000 from employees; $180,000 from the board of trustees; and $250,000 from the auxiliary.

The balance was pledged by 200 community volunteers.

A neonatal intensive care unit manages infants with medical problems such as complications of delivery, premature birth or any short term problems which need monitoring.

Infants needing this care currently must be transported to another facility.

A cardiac catheterization laboratory provides sophisticated angiography equipment used to analyze the condition of the coronary arteries that feed blood to the heart.

The new service will allow local residents to have cardiac studies performed at San Antonio rather than transferring to another facility out of the area.

Making birth a touching experience

Lakes Project good for Upland: consultant

By Diana E. Lundin

With or without the construction of the Foothill Freeway, the San Antonio Lakes Project would be a financial boon to the city of Upland, a consultant said last week.

Financial consultant Leslie Davis said the only negative effects of the proposal are one-time costs to the park acquisition and development fund and the street and traffic facility fund.

Upland also would have to swallow the costs of road maintenance, which Davis said is typical. Cities and counties usually have more expenses for street repairs than they can meet.

At a joint meeting between the City Council and the Planning Commission to study the Pennhill Land Co. project, Davis outlined two fiscal scenarios, one supposing the freeway is built.

If the freeway is completed, the developer's plans include 1,520 residences, 50 acres of commercial use and a 6.8-acre park, built over an eight-year period.

Without the route, Pennhill's plan includes 2,092 houses and 26.1 acres devoted to businesses.

Davis figured the houses would be priced somewhere between $108,000 and $210,000.

Commercial development would total between $36 million and $64 million.

Total market value for the project would range between $277 million, without the freeway, and $308 million with it.

Some 40 percent of the revenue from the project would be generated from property tax while 45 percent would be derived from sales taxes, she said.

With the freeway, she said the city would spend $21,520 more on the development than it brought in from taxes and licenses there in 1988, the first year of development.

That shortfall would continue until 1995 when a surplus of $189,487 is yielded. When the project is completed in 1996, revenue over costs will give the city an annual surplus of $360,570.

If the freeway isn't built, Upland would have a first-year deficit of $2,610, she said. Again, a deficit would occur each year until 1995 and then would create a yearly income of $176,190 to the general fund.

Food distribution slated by county

San Bernardino County's Community Services Department Food Distribution Program will distribute commodities made available by the U.S. Department of Agriculture this month.

Income and residency verification must be provided in order to receive the surplus food. Income may be verified by a paycheck stub, income tax return, Social Security check or copy, unemployment compensation check or public assistance records, such as Medi-Cal, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and Food Stamps. A California Driver License or Identification Card, a current utility bill or rent receipt or library card can be used to verify residency.

In order to qualify for commodities, people do not have to be 18 years of age, but must be the head of their households. Eligible recipients are requested to bring a container for their commodities. Also, recipients who are affected by the extra warm weather conditions are advised to arrange their commodity pickups at the beginning, cooler portion of the distribution or arrange for a representative to pick up the food for them.

Local distribution sites include:

- Monday, Sept. 14 — Rancho Cucamonga Neighborhood Center, 9791 Arrow Highway, Rancho Cucamonga, from 1:30-3:30 p.m. for Rancho Cucamonga, Alta Loma, Etiwanda and Upland residents.

- Thursday, Sept. 17 — Chino Community Building, 5443 B St., Chino, from 9-11 a.m. for Chino residents.

- Thursday, Sept. 24 — Montclair Community Center, 5111 Benito St., Montclair, from 1-3 p.m. for Montclair residents.

For more information on the schedule, call the Community Services Department Food Distribution Program at 829-3771.
